“Promoting EFL Students’ Active Learning: From Theory to Practice”
December 14th, 2023

Call for Communication

The Scope:

It is widely recognized that the major aim of modern education is primarily concerned with making students responsible for their own learning. This direction of thought has been driven by the strong desire to achieve self-directed and life-long learning. On this basis, active learning seems to be an adequate approach to transcend the traditional transmissive modes of instruction which, all too often, stress the role of the teacher at the expense of students' engagement in constructing knowledge. A wide range of literature praises the merits of implementing active learning strategies in the EFL classroom. Therefore, encouraging active learning is crucial owing to its powerful impact upon students' learning. Indeed, numerous recent studies have concluded that in many learning contexts across different disciplines, students showed a significant interest in active learning strategies over the traditional lecture-based methods. Within this course of thought, the present call for communication essentially seeks to involve teachers and researchers in concretizing active learning in the EFL classroom. The scientific event is centred on the following tracks of research:

- Active learning : perspectives and challenges
- Active learning Vs traditional modes of instruction
- Active learning in literary studies
- Innovation and change in EFL education
- Teacher education development (T.E.D)
- Technology in teaching language and literature
